A NEW DISCOVERY IN DENTISTRY, - NOthing is more to be admired than a fine set of natural teeth and the possessor is more to be envied if they can be retained during life. But unfortunately they fall a prey to disease, and we are frequently obliged to resort to art to restore the lost organs,

Few sciences have made more rapid progress, and gained a stronger hold on the people than dentistry has in the past forty years, at which time artificial teeth were almost entirely unknown, and the best attempts at artificial substitutes were but unreasonable

Human teeth that graced the lips of the dead were made to adorn the month of the living. The teeth of animals, the teeth of the elephant and hippopotamus were used to restore decaying beauty, but these like

Next came porcelain teeth, at first rude indeed, but far superior to the'r lvory predecessors. The introduction of porcelain teeth marked a new era in dentistry, and after years of experimenting they were brought to their present state of perfection.

Ivory curved into the shape of the gums formed the first base to which teeth were against Chief Fire Engineer Saxton; the PERSONS in need of the services of an exrienced Destist should not fail to consult the purpose. Even this metal was found to Dr. Doers, who has an experience of twelve years practice in Canton. The object of every one should be to preserve the natural teeth if possible; but when we are obliged to resort to supply their loss, the matter of economy as well as the important consideration of health and wearer of these plates gives them the most Saxton and Schaefer a special committee to unqualified endorsement, and they only need to be seen to recommend them more strongly than words can possibly do.

A call at the office of Dr. Douds who alone manufactures them in this county, will convince the most incredulous of the truth of the above statements.
